

Policy Ideas in the History of Economic Thought

Fall, 2010

V31.0208.001

General Course Description

Economic policy has been important since before the beginning of systematic economic thought. This course will examine a few selected policy issues drawn from classical to present-day economic thought. These may vary from year to year. The emphasis will be on those topics that are of continuing present-day interest. This year some of the thinkers are Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, John Stuart Mill, Arthur C. Pigou, Ludwig von Mises, John Maynard Keynes, and Friedrich Hayek. The topics will range widely including: the protection of domestic industry, Say's Law and macroeconomic policy, use of taxes to deal with external effects, property rights, and economic calculation without markets

Prerequisites: Both Principles I and II.
